My 4Rs: Regrow, Rebalance, Recover, Rethink

My (Re)Generation Action Story:

My 4 R's are Rethink, Regrow, Rebalance, and Recover. I believe that we should Rethink how we create our things and find better ways to generate energy, instead of polluting our land, air, and water. I think we should Regrow nature by planting trees, plants, and more things to help out mother nature. We also need to Rebalance the efforts spent on development and think about how we can conserve nature. I believe that if we do all these things right, our earth may have a chance to Recover from all of the damage that was caused.

In my picture, I drew a balance scale with the earth on one side and people on the other. The people are a metaphor for all the damage we have caused, such as polluting our land and oceans. If the scale is not balanced, then it is our job to Rebalance it. I also drew a waterfall on the earth’s side and a power plant station with a road next to it on the human’s side. That was to represent that we need to conserve the beauty of nature, and help our planet Recover from the things that harm our environment. To do that, we can start small by planting trees to Regrow nature; we can Rethink our actions before doing them, and we can make sure not to make the same mistakes again.

While making this piece of art, I thought about how I could take action too. The paper that I used was a piece of scrap paper that I had used before. You can even see the drawn-over illustrations on the back. The supplies I used were leftover pencils and markers that I rarely used. I hope that my work of art inspires you to do something related and help save our planet from waste.
